Department of Writing and Linguistics

The Department of Writing and Linguistics strives to produce graduates who understand the art and science of language and writing. Grounded in Creative Writing, Linguistics, Professional and Technical Writing, plus Writing Studies and Rhetoric courses that combine the theoretical with the experiential, the program's goal is the reflective writer, with knowledge of various genres, writing and language processes, digital literacies, and writing technologies. Through capstone courses and publishing, research, internship, and community activities for its students, the major supports the University's mission to link "theory with practice," to "extend the learning environment beyond the classroom," and to "promote student growth and life success." In addition, with its emphasis on small class sizes and individualized development necessary for transformative education with significant concomitant positive impact on student learning, the B.A. in Writing and Linguistics is an excellent manifestation of the University's emphasis on "large-scale, small feel."

Students with the B.A. in Writing and Linguistics will display the ability to understand language as a complex/dynamic/adaptive system of communication shaped by biology, cognition, culture, rhetorical situation, and sociological forces. Given this overarching scope, program graduates will be able to:

1. Discuss fundamental concepts in the study of writing and linguistics, including the ability to:
   a. Identify current issues, trends, and organizations in writing and linguistics.
   b. Define terms, themes, and genres common to the study of writing and languages.
   c. Identify and analyze the structure and the inner workings of writing and language in published works of different genres.

2. Critically select and apply appropriate theoretical, methodological, and/or technical tools that include the ability to:
   a. Explain the role of audience, purpose, and rhetorical strategy in writing.
   b. Use design principles and tools (including research and elements of form) to heighten a document's impact.
   c. Produce a written, creative, or visual product that applies theories of writing and language and that synthesizes knowledge and skills in writing and linguistics.

3. Examine the processes common to the study of writing and linguistics, including the ability to:
   a. Interact with the cognitive, social, and affective factors which shape writing tasks and language processes.
   b. Employ techniques for generating ideas, writing, researching, and revising.
   c. Synthesize information from multiple sources.

4. Practice the assessment of writing that includes the ability to:
   a. Critically and constructively evaluate one's own writing.
   b. Critically and constructively evaluate the writing of others.
